NEW YORK'S HORROR

The Park Place Ruins Giving Up Their Dead.

NEARLY 50 BODIES RECOVERED.

The Total Loss of Life Now Estimated at 120.

Anxions Relatives Watch the Men at Work-Crewds at the Morgue at All Hours-Pushing the Work of Digging Out the Dead-Fourful Smeil from the Decomposing Bodies.

New York, Aug. 25.—Another weary day's search of the rulus has brought forth its ghastly results. It was a slokening task to the men engaged in it, a mournful vigil for those who looked on and saw the slow procession of workmen from time to time carry out a mangled burden that sometimes had the faintest resemblance to the outline of a human being. But worse than all, it was a fear-ful suspense for the afflicted relatives of the missing ones, who watched and waited near the ruins, cagerly scanning each misshapen corpse, fearing lest it sliently told the tale they had along dreaded to hear

The awful heartrending scream of agony that pierced the air when the man-gled body of Maggie Quinn was recog-nized by her sister made everybody tremble. The agony of a father and the grief of a mother as the body of a loved one was carried from the recking ruins moved the succeptators to tesse. Belliemoved the spectators to tears, Police-men and firemen, who are used to har-rowing scenes, were deeply affected, and no word of hope, of cheer, could be said. A Fearful Steach from the Buins.

The worst part of the tragedy is yet to come, as evidenced by the fearful stench which indicates unknown horrors and an almost inestimable number of bodies buried underneath the weight of rubbish buried underneath the weight of rubbish and machinery.

This morning a terrible stench came from that part of the ruins occupied by the restaurant. It is probable that this spot will add a fearful talls even to the present estimate of the horror.

James Mitchell, a lawyer, detected an Italian workman, giving his name as Joseph Lusson, in the act of rifling the pockets of a victim of the disaster. He was at once locked up, but not a minute too soon to escape the vengeance of the angry citizens who were in the vicinity. The coroner was given possession of the stolen articles.

SCENES AT THE MOTGUE.

A Repetition of the Horrors of the Past Three Days.

NEW YORK, Aug. 25 .- Within the walls of the morgue, which sheltered the poor mangled and disfigured bodies of the victims of the Park place disaster, the scene to-day was but a repetition of the horrors of the days before, augmented and made more terrible as time went on, which naturally tended to make the condition of the bodies more revolting than ever.

If ever wee and horror ran amuck, hand in hand, it was at the morgue to-day.

The odor was indescribable. Strong men who faced that row of pine coffins with their contents of burned and distorted humanity for several minutes were often obliged to stagger away weak from an overpowering sense of nauses.

Death and such scenes were not intended for the tender eyes of women, yet many a mother, wife, daughter and sister endured the unspeakable horror of the morgae in their search for loved ones be-Heved to have been swallowed up in the ruin.

Many of these women trembled and

Many of these women trembled and or-Many of these women trempled and sobbed hysterically during the awful or-deal. Others would take one glance as the coffins were uncovered, and then, with a pitiful gasp, they would turn away with white faces and fall fainting into the arms of a morgue attendant.

New York, Ang. 25.—Acting District Attorney Bedford a signed Assistant Dis-trict Attorney Townsend to set as legal adviser to Ceremer Hamley during the in-quest upon the bodies of the victims of the Park place disaster.
